

ABSTRACT

An approach for efficiently reducing background noise from speech signal in real-time applications is presented. A noisy input speech signal is processed through an inverse filter when the spectrum tilt of the input signal is not that of a pure
5 background noise model the noisy input signal is also filtered in order to reduce the spectrum valley areas of the noisy input signal when the background noise is present.